Message from the Director

As the October SDF conference in Quebec City approaches, I look forward to once again seeing members of the SDF community.

It's a busy autumn. At least twelve activities are scheduled for the month of October alone.

Renewal of the SDF is also high on our agenda. While the decision to renew, and at what funding level, is the government's, I do foresee the continuation of the SDF's four elements: Centres of Expertise at Canadian universities, a Chair in Defence Management Studies, a Scholarship and Internship Program, and a Special Projects Fund.

Once the government's decision is taken, we will promptly issue a formal call for proposals. As timelines will be short, Canadian universities should already be considering their response to a call for proposals for a Centre in Expertise and/or a Chair in Defence Management Studies.

I look forward to visiting with you all in Quebec City this month. Good luck with the start of a new academic year.

SDF Conference

Quebec City, 20-22 October 2005
Canadian Defence Policy in A Time of Change

This year's Security and Defence Forum (SDF) conference will be held in Quebec City, hosted by the International Peace and Security Programme at Université Laval, the Centre d'études des politiques étrangères et de sécurité of Concordia University & UQAM, and the Research Group in International Security at McGill University & Université de Montréal.

The conference will include two academic panels: one on Canada's new Defence Policy Statement, and the other on challenges awaiting the Canadian Forces in Kandahar. Senior CF officers have been invited to hold discussion sessions on the role and transformation of the Land Forces. In addition, a visit to the Headquarters of the 5th Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group and the Valcartier Garrison's artillery ranges has been booked for interested conference participants.

The conference will bring together experts from SDF Centres of Expertise from across Canada. Participants will include students, administrative staff, researchers, government policy makers and the general public.

For more information, please contact: Jean-Sebastien Rioux at jean-sebastien.rioux@pol.ulaval.ca.

was Colin Robertson, Public Advocacy and Legislative Secretariat, Canadian Embassy, Washington, D.C. For more information, contact stratnet@ucalgary.ca.

Your SDF Community: Adam Bower

Adam Bower is one of three individuals being sponsored by the SDF in an internship placement this year. Adam successfully graduated from the University of Toronto with a Master's degree in Political Science last year, and he has conducted research in the areas of international security and disarmament, particularly with respect to the proliferation of small arms and nuclear weapons. Adam is now embarking on a year-long research project with Oxfam Canada, exploring Canadian foreign, defence, and development policy towards failed and failing states.

21-22 September 2005

The Centre for European Studies and the Institute of European and Russian Studies at Carleton University sponsored a conference entitled Democracy and Multi-level Governance in the EU and Canada. The Centre for Foreign Policy Studies will conduct a crisis management simulation exercise on the 12th and 14th of October at Dalhousie University. The exercise aims to provide university students and others interested in security and defence matters with an opportunity to gain insight into government decision-making in international crises through their participation in a simulated (and realistic) Interdepartmental Working Group. During the simulation, the participants will develop government options in response to a crisis situation on a Caribbean island where Canadian lives and interests are at stake. The full range of Canadian capabilities, including military, will be available to the participants, who will assume roles as representatives of Foreign Affairs Canada, the Privy Council Office of Canada, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Canada, the RCMP, CIDA, and National Defence. The majority of the defence roles will be played by junior officers in the Canadian Forces. For information on this simulation, please contact Cdr Bob Edwards, Centre for Foreign Policy Studies, Dalhousie University, at redwards@dal.ca or (902) 494-6610.

The Demand-Resource Dilemma: The Experiences of 2nd and 3rd Tier Air Forces

The 2nd Biennial Aerospace Power Forum focuses upon the unique problems confronting 2nd and 3rd tier air forces in the current security environment. Aerospace scholars and practitioners from a number of countries will discuss national approaches to some core questions: the roles of air forces, maintaining interoperability with US air forces, the relative utility of aerospace power, force structure challenges, fiscal environments, and equipment and personnel training demands.

General T. Michael Moseley, Vice Chief of Staff, USAF and former Air Component Commander for Operations Southern Watch, Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom, has been invited to give the keynote address on the challenges and options facing 2nd and 3rd tier air forces from an American perspective. To provide comparative examples to the Canadian Air Force experience, other invited speakers will represent perspectives from the United Kingdom, France, Russia, India, Germany, the Netherlands, Spain and South Africa, among others.

Recent and Upcoming Publications

Canadian Naval Review, Edited by Ann L. Griffiths with Deputy Editor Doug Thomas (Summer 2005). In May 2005, the Centre for Foreign Policy Studies at Dalhousie University launched the first edition of the Canadian Naval Review (CNR). The second edition was published this summer and features a conversation with Rear-Admiral Dan McNeil, Commander Joint Task Force Atlantic, as well as articles about the Victoria-Class submarine, 'amphibiosity,' and Canada's new maritime security framework. The third edition will be published in October. CNR is a quarterly professional journal which examines a wide range of naval and related national maritime security issues from a Canadian perspective, with particular emphasis on strategic concepts, policies, procurement programs, and operations. For more information on the journal or to submit an article, please contact the journal at naval.review@dal.ca or visit <http://naval.review.cfps.dal.ca/>.

Rwanda and the Great Lakes: Ten Years On From Genocide, Edited by Susan M. Thompson and Zoe Wilson (June 2005). This new book will be of great interest to scholars and activists working towards peace in the Great Lakes Region of Africa. It includes contributions by Gareth Evans, co-author of The Responsibility to Protect, Lloyd Axworthy, and African voices from the Great Lakes Region. For more information on this book, please contact the Dalhousie Centre for Foreign Policy Studies at centre@dal.ca or visit www.cfps.dal.ca.

Security and Defence in the Terrorist Era, By Dr. Elinor Sloan (October 2005). Sloan's book challenges Canada's traditional "the best defence is a good offence" approach to security, arguing that in the post 9/11 era "defensive" military and civilian measures at home are just as important to Canada as "offensive" military activities abroad. The book is set to be released 1 October. For more information, please contact csds@carleton.ca.

Martello Papers. The Queen's Centre for International Relations published the next two papers in the Martello series: The Roots of Soft Power: The Trudeau Government, De-NATOization and Denuclearization (#27) and North American Security: American's Response, Canada's Role (#28). Two New Chairs Appointed

The University of Calgary's Centre for Military and Strategic Studies (CMSS) is furthering its defence and security studies program with the addition of two new academic chairs.

The Canadian Defence & Foreign Affairs Institute Chair in Civil-Military Relations has been awarded to Dr. Anne Irwin, who will hold a joint appointment in the Department of Anthropology. Through this position she will further research, teach and explore military culture in relation to civilian society and the media. Dr. Irwin served in the Canadian Forces Reserves for 15 years, retiring as a Military Police officer with the rank of Major. She holds BA and MA degrees in anthropology from the University of Calgary and a PhD in social anthropology from the University of Manchester. She is a graduate of the Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College's Militia Command and Staff Course.

The Arthur J.E. Child Foundation Chair in Defence Economics has been awarded to Dr. Michael McKee, who has extensive experience in military issues related to economics and defence spending. The University of Calgary will be the only university in Canada to implement a program in defence economics other than the Royal Military College in Ontario. Dr. McKee spent two years as a senior economist at the National Energy Board in Canada before joining the College of Business Administration at the University of Tennessee. He has worked extensively with the U.S. Department of Defence and has a thorough understanding of the Canadian military.

The Search for WMD: Non-proliferation, Intelligence and Preemption in the New Security Environment, Edited by Graham F. Walker (forthcoming). This is the third volume in the Centre for Foreign Policy Studies' issue-and-debate series addressing contemporary topics in security and defence studies. In this volume, twenty-five scholars and policy-makers respond to Michael Friend's article about the search for weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. The contributors to this volume debate the merits of arms control treaties, the short-comings and increased requirements of the intelligence community, and the viability of an international system founded upon a doctrine of preemptive war. United States Foreign Oil Policy Since World War I, by Stephen Randall (June 2005), published by McGill-

Queen's University Press. The author contends that U.S. foreign oil policy since the First World War has been consistently based on ensuring an adequate supply of oil and oil products at reasonable prices to meet the industrial and military needs of American society. The result has been an ongoing search for energy security that has taken the United States into regions of the world where its national security would not otherwise have been at stake, even at the height of the Cold War. For more information, please contact stratnet@ucalgary.ca.

Selected Papers from the April 2005 conference: The New Defence Agenda. The New Defence Agenda research program, run by the Chair in Defence Management Studies at Queen's University, continues to develop with a major initiative, Timely Defence Procurement, which will examine how the government-wide system of defence procurement should be transformed to meet the goals of the Defence Policy Statement. This research team will be led by Mr. Alan Williams, former ADM (Materiel) at NDHQ. The project is underway and will include three workshops, a major publication to be completed in the spring of 2006 and the development of a MPA course "Defence Procurement and Politics" scheduled for the spring term 2006.
